/PERPETUAL PASSAGE

Nate McLeod's PERPETUAL PASSAGE invites viewers into an immersive space — a space that draws one in and seems to infinitely stretch the Project Room in both directions. As the viewer moves through the space the work appears to transform, creating a dialogue between artwork, exhibition space, and viewer. Expanding upon Théophile Gautier's concept of "l'art pour l'art" (translated as "art for art's sake"), the artwork does not provide extraneous information so the viewer is left to simply consider this three-way dialogue and the experience of viewing the artwork.
